ENVISAGING IS BELIEVING

American planes long have been flying the Hump, the air route over the Himalayas from India to China, but it is extremely doubtful if Americans in general have had any idea of the tremendous volume that traffic has reached.

A report of amazing achievement on the subject comes from Brig. Gen. William H. Turner of the Army Air Transport Command at Kunming, China. General Turner discloses that during January the ATC flew 40,000 tons of war materials from India to China. This more than doubled the tonnage carried over the old Burma Road at its peak and established a record. It seems almost incredible, but, in setting the record, China-bound planes crossed The Hump every two and one-half minutes 24 hours a day during the month.

General Turner's report is its own evidence that the opening of the new Leda-Burma Road, instead of causing a slackening of air traffic to China, has actually spurred it to greater heights of activity.

Military supplies now are moving to China in increasing volume by land and air. They are being moved for several purposes, chief of which is the mounting of a land offensive against Japanese forces in China to free the country of the invader.
Another purpose is support of American landings on the China coast for the eventual invasion of Japan itself.

More immediate may be a project concerning which Lieut.
Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer, commander of American Army forces in China, evaded a direct answer. General Wedemeyer was asked if he envisaged shuttle bombing of Japan between the Philippines and China. Replied the general, "The Japanese do."

Shuttle bombing means that Superfortresses based in the Philippines and China would bomb Japan, continue to the opposite base, refuel and reload and bomb Japan again on the return trip.
Such operations require large supplies at each end of the run.
There seems reason to believe that such supplies are being built up. And if the Japanese envisage shuttle bombing of their homeland, there certainly is reason to hope that they will experience it.

HE WON'T GET THE JOB

A year ago Berlin was being bombed only lightly compared to the shellacking that it is now receiving. And a year ago, Dr. Joseph Goebbels was quoted by the German news agency, DNB, as having said:

"Berlin can be rebuilt in a comparatively short time. Preparatory work is already being done.
It will be my greatest and most gratifying task to conduct the work of reconstruction here myself."

It looks as if Dr. Goebbels was a bit premature in his postwar planning for the rebuilding of Berlin. It was thoughtful of him to offer his own services in the great task of reconstruction of the Nazi capital, but it is doubtful that he will ever be employed as supervising architect.

Time To Follow Up

Washington, Mar. 6
NO ONE will contend that, so far, the President has put his full weight into the fight for the national service act, urged by the military authorities as vital to the war effort.
This is evidenced by the fact that leading the opposition are various staunch New Dealers whom everyone knows can be brought into line whenever the White House chooses really to exert itself.

IT IS true that before he went to Yalta Mr. Roosevelt sent two strong messages to Congress on the subject. It is true, also, that while at the Crimean conference he sent a letter to Senator Barkley rather mildly expressing hope that the Senate would pass the House bill.

But that is all he has done to put through this measure which he has joined with the united military authorities in urging as essential to the success of our armies in the field. There are two things to be said about that—first, that what he did was wholly inadequate; second, that he could have done—and still can do—a great deal more.

HIS PERSONAL absence to attend the Big Three conference, of course, was unavoidable. But he could have followed the Assistant President, War Mobilizer James F. Byrnes, whose popularity in Congress and whose long legislative experience, political tact and talents make him an exceedingly effective force on Capitol Hill.

Through Mr. Byrnes the President could have transmitted his personal influence in behalf of the national service act. Without Mr.
Byrnes there was no one left here who could follow up the presidential recommendations as they should be followed up. Scarcely anyone is so unsophisticated as not to know that presidential recommendations have to be followed up.

Any presidential recommendation on a controversial matter not followed up by real White House pressure loses its force. It is naturally taken as a sign that the President is not acutely concerned.

IN THIS case there was no follow-up. The President was away. Mr.
Byrnes was away. Mr. Hopkins was away. Mr. Early was away. There was no one left to put the pressure on. No other member of the Cabinet carries any weight with Congress or is recognized as a presidential spokesman. The chairman of the National Committee, Mr. Hannegan, is ineffectual as an administration lobbyist. There was no one to act for the President—and no one did act. As a result, the President's own friends, under heavy CIO pressure, felt free to scuttle the President's proposal.
And that is exactly what they have done. The House modified the original measure, but passed the fairly satisfactory May-Bailey work or fight bill. But in the Senate, the CIO senators, who are also White House senators, tore that bill to pieces in committee and produced a bill so inadequate as to be ridiculous. It was thus described in a scathing indictment by Senator Bailey on the Senate floor.

THERE THE situation stands. However, it is by no means hopeless.
Some time next week the Senate probably will pass the meaningless Kilgore bill, which is satisfactory to the CIO but not to many others.

and certainly not to the chiefs of staff or the Secretaries of the War and Navy departments. It falls absurdly short of their urgent requests and of Mr. Roosevelt's messages. Perhaps, it will be improved by amendments but there appears no chance of it emerging as an adequate bill. But the House seems really determined not to retreat from the May-Bailey bill.
Eventually, of course, the final draft will be written in the conference committee, the Senate members of which will be named by Vice President Truman and the House members by Speaker Rayburn.

IT IS IN this committee that the real job will be done. Upon it now depends whether or not the Congress of the United States at this exceedingly critical moment, with as the President says, "the wars not won," will refuse the earnest pleas of the responsible men conducting these wars and listen to the voice of selfish labor leaders who are now using the political power they have accumulated through Roosevelt support to defeat a Roosevelt proposal demanded by the national interests. As one caustic Senator remarked the other day, "The CIO is always with the President when the President is with the CIO."

AT ANY RATE the President is now home. So is Mr. Byrnes. Perhaps, between them they can find a way of convincing the members of the conference committee that this proposal vital and that the President deeply earnestly wholeheartedly and personally wants it—wants it badly enough to resent and remember the opposition of those who call themselves his friends. So far, that idea has not been driven home.

CHAPTER THIRTY-FOUR

True, I was none the wiser for any of my clues, if clues they were, for I didn't know who had murdered Conrad or Claud. But still there they were, and suppose something happened to me. Not that I intended to let anything happen to me; but I did want a clear—or fairly clear conscience. Just in case.

And it was equally conceivable that the little I knew might later, in some way, clear Drue or another innocent person, rather than convict anyone.

So I wrote it quickly, a bare statement of facts about the hypo-themic—not the medicine box, for that was still Drue's secret—but it in an envelope, and, as I didn't know what else to do with it, I pinned that too to the under side of my uniform, just below a pocket so it didn't show, and patted it down flat.

Even then, however, I didn't go to Drue. I had nothing to tell her, nothing at all to offer that would give her support, except my affection for her and she knew she had that.

Besides, I'd have to ask her again about the medicine box.

But I was beginning to be thankful for the trooper on guard at the door. Whatever the intention was, the result must be a degree of safety for Drue. After that twilight moment or two down in the meadow, a queer and horrible on-sawing was everywhere in that house, among the shadows of driveway and garden, across the stretch of lawns, around every corner.
Even the encircling, shadowy hills seemed to know it and wait and watch.

I went first in search of Anna's room. The narrow hall that crossed the main corridor near the stairway led to the back of the house and I turned into it, passed the entrance to some rather steep back stairs, trudged again and brought up in a wing that was obviously the servants' wing. I walked along, passing one or two open doors beyond which Anna obviously was not, and came to a closed one.

And just as I knocked someone inside the room spoke. It was a murmur, further muffled by my knock, but it sounded masculine.
And it stopped abruptly at the sound of my knuckles on the door.

But it was Anna's room; for, after a longish pause, I knocked again and then Anna said quaver-ingly, "Is that you, Gertrude? I—I'm asleep."

"It's Miss Keate. I want to see you."

There was another sudden silence on the other side of the door.
This time, however, there was a quality of consternation about it.
Anna was not the type for tender dalliance; I didn't even think of that. But I didn't imagine the consternation either for it was plain in Anna's voice when she said suddenly, almost at the keyhole, breathlessly, "I—I'm all right now.
I'm not upset any more."

And when I insisted, she just kept repeating it, "I'm all right. Thank you, Nurse. There's nothing wrong —nothing wrong . . ." with her voice growing thinner and more frightened at every word. It was exactly as if whoever was there with her, and had stopped talking when I knocked, was standing beside her holding a club over her head.

But it wasn't really till sometime the next morning that they found the other yellow glove, bloodstained and stiff, hidden under the mattress in Anna's room. And by that time it was impossible to question her.

Well, luckily in a way, I didn't yet know about that. And I couldn't break down the door to Anna's room and I couldn't see through hard pine.

I said, "Open the door, Anna.
Beevens said you were ill. I'd like to get some medicine for you."

"Thank you, Miss Keate. No, I'm all right now." There was another slight pause, and she added, "I don't need medicine, thank you. I don't need anything."

So in the end I was obliged to retire to the end of the hall, loudly, and return on tiptoe to the open door of a room opposite Anna's.
But after five minutes no one had emerged and there was no further sound of a (possibly) masculine voice from behind the closed door on which my eyes were glued. I was eyeing the keyhole thoughtfully, and, indeed, had topped noisier and was bending over (merely to see if a key was in it, as there was) when I heard footsteps behind me and straightened and whirled around and it was Beevens.

Who said "Ah" and coughed, giving me a chance to pull myself together. Not that I needed it; I said "Yes, Beevens?" as calmly as if keyhole investigation were my everyday and normal activity.

"Dear, dear," observed Beevens, and again coughed and choked and coughed so wildly that I saw he was agitatedly concerned with something else. His eyes were bulging and his throat palpitated like a fish's gills above the little white wings of his collar.

Craig wanted me—at once, he said.

Not even by a look did he question my presence just where I was and where I had no business to be.
So I followed Beevens back to Craig's room and Craig was waiting impatiently, watching me the door. "There you are!" he snapped.
"Come in. That's all, Beevens.
Shut the door."

Beevens hesitated. "If you please, Mr. Craig . . ." He looked uneasy but so determined that it checked Craig's impatience.

"What is it, Beevens?"

The butler cleared his throat and came nearer the bed. "Two things, really, Mr. Craig. I've been in some doubt, but I—if you feel quite able . . ." He glanced anxiously at me as if for my permission and Craig said quickly, "Yes, of course.
What is it?" Beevens swallowed.

"A large blue vase has disappeared from the hall."

Craig frowned, his eyes peer-plexed. Beevens added, "No one knows anything about its disappearance."

After a moment Craig asked,
"What else?"

The other item Beevens had to relay was more serious. "It's a question of alibis, sir," he said.
"Mr. Nicky told the police he spent two hours this afternoon in the morning room; he said he didn't leave the room at all during the time Dr. Chivory was killed. And Gertrude—the housemaid—saw him there twice."

"Well, go on."

"But he did leave, sir. I saw him."

Craig sat up abruptly. "You saw him? When? Where?"
Beevens looked quickly over his shoulder and lowered his voice still further. "He went out the side door, sir. Walking toward the garage. I thought nothing of it naturally. Until the police . . ."

"What time?"

Beevens swallowed hard. "Not more than half an hour before the nurse found Dr. Chivory and reached us with the news. Scarcely half an hour, as a matter of fact."

There was another silence. The butler's eyes watched Craig and reserved conclusions. And I thought: Was it Nicky then in the meadow?
But Claud Chivory had been dead for some time when I found him.
Then why, if it was Nicky, had he lingered? Or had he returned for something? The glove? The knife?

Craig said, "Are you sure it was Nicky?"

Beevens permitted himself a slight shrug. "I saw him walking toward the garage and thus toward the meadow. Besides, I couldn't mistake his checked coat; I was looking out the pantry window.
But I didn't see him return. I was busy then in the dining room; he could have returned by the door just opposite the back stairs, gone upstairs and then down again by the front stairs. There's no doubt he had returned by the time the nurse reached the house."

He paused. "Shall I tell the police, sir?
I heard them question him and he definitely did not admit his absence from the house."

"Yes . . ." murmured Craig, and changed his mind. "No! No—I'll tell them. Is that all, Beevens?"

It was apparently all. But after Craig had gone, closing the door carefully behind him, Craig lay for a moment in thoughtful silence; he looked perplexed—but there was something else in his eyes, as if Beevens' story had given him the barest glimpse of some new idea.

Craig finally shook his head in an impatient and perplexed way and looked at me. "See here, Miss Keate, I've been thinking. You're fond of Drue, aren't you? Never mind answering, I've got eyes. Well, then . . ." He paused, his gaze plunging deeply into my own as if to test some quality within me.

"Look here," he said, "I've got to trust you. You're pretty discreet—aren't you?"

I lifted my eyebrows and nose.
Presently he frowned and said slowly, "It's not me or you that's in danger. It's Drue. If they get hold of material evidence against her . . ."

"All right. Tell me quickly."

Today's Quiet Moment

By Rev. George C. Tibbets of Bensalem Township

God of mercy bend down Thine ear, we beseech Thee. Thou didst give Thine only Son for us, yet we have done evil in Thy sight. We have been silent when we should have been singing Thy praises; we have been loud with worldly cares and pleasures when we should have been silent before Thy majesty; we have walked our own path of selfishness and turned our backs on Thy forgiving love when we should have been serving and praising Thee. O Lord of mercy, forgive and strengthen Thy servants through the Holy Spirit, we pray. Amen.

Boys' Club Loses Seventh Straight Contest in The Youth League

CELTICS ARE VICTORS

Third Ward Eagles Lose The Contest by Score of 42 to 32

The Catholic Boys Club dropped their seventh straight game in the Bristol Youth League last night on the Mutual Aid floor being beaten by the Bristol Aces, 50-24. In the other contest, the Celtics won out over the Third Ward Eagles, 42-32.

Giantomasse and Cochran led the Aces to their triumph with 12 points each although Leo Fiorelli was close behind with five double-doubles. Tommy Kervick scored eight of the Catholic Boys' points.

Johnny Mamma was high scorer for the Celtics in their game. He rolled the hoops for nine field goals and a foul. "Johnny" Rodgers did the best work for the Eagles with 15 points, the result of seven fielders and a foul.

was received and perused by councilmen. It was also announced that a new American flag has arrived, and that a new service flag for the borough has been purchased.

The Pa. Department of Health informed council that an alleged nuisance at a local residence has been ordered abated within 30 days.

Highway committee reported that during a recent sleet storm chinders had been immediately placed at intersections by a borough employee. Some gutters were ordered cleaned as soon as weather conditions permit. There was a lengthy discussion on condition of sidewalks and curbs, and the need for laying of sidewalks at properties where such do not exist. Members also considered at length water supply question locally, with suggestions for future years.

The financial report for 1944 was presented to councilmen by the secretary. Balance reported in the treasury last evening was $741.77, following receipt of $200 for liquor license and $25.98 in taxes. Bills ordered paid included: Philadelphia Electric Co., current, $62.29; fire insurance levy, $2.25; Frank Forker (preparation of financial report), $6; Ferd. Reetz, rubbish collection, $19.50; total $90.04.

SAUCE FOR THE GANDER

Likewise one labor group after another, by special allowances, has wound up receiving considerably more pay, even though the wage-formula itself is unchanged.

The extent to which an accurate and impartial survey would show the true inflation can be indicated by pointing out that official publications out of Washington show a jump in farm-land prices in four years of 43 per cent.

Yet by publicity staffs and trick figures the New Dealers boldly repeat, day after day, the empty boast that they are controlling inflation.

With his tongue in his cheek, Lewis adapts this New Deal reasoning to claim that a long series of provisions under which the miners would receive more money and spend less of it in their employment do not change the Little Steel formula—and hence, that their salaries would not be raised and inflation thereby increased.

But the most ironic touch is the adoption by Lewis of the Petrillo plan of a union royalty on the finished product.

Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, will be remembered as the man who successfully bluffed both the WPB and President Roosevelt himself.

By boldly refusing to obey a WLB order, declining emphatically to appear before WLB, and turning down flatly a public appeal from the President to withdraw from his position, Petrillo was able to force all makers of phonograph records to pay royalties into a union war chest which Petrillo, who holds the key, politely calls an "employment fund."

Petrillo has traded on the President's fear of antagonizing him and losing the votes he controls, not only to put into effect the royalty plan which almost everyone agrees is extremely dangerous, but to do such further high-handed acts as closing down school entertainments and forcing the employment, in the face of the man-power shortage, of employees which radio companies neither need nor use.

Any administration which had more backbone than a potato-vine, which was not visibly more concerned over votes than its own self-respect, would have cracked down on Petrillo months ago.

Congress' position has been that of begging for some sign that the President would co-operate in carving Petrillo down into something compatible with democratic government.

Thus far Mr. Roosevelt has preferred to try to forget that he was successfully defied by a labor boss during the period when the President and Attorney General Biddle were trying to "make an example" of Mr. Avery for doing a great deal less than Petrillo in the way of resisting WLB.

Lewis' demands will not permit the President longer to ignore the Petrillo challenge.

The bold proposal to compromise the deadlock over the miners' demands by using the Petrillo precedent of a labor union tax on the public can hardly fail to result in a showdown.

While the war emergency may have been some faint justification for the shakedown being allowed to go ahead temporarily in the field of music, the proposal of extending it into a basic war industry like coal cannot be taken lightly.

As was widely stated at the time of the Petrillo innovation, the plan is one which changes fundamentally the position of labor unions.

It makes them largely independent of government control, and indeed in some ways puts them higher than the White House—since they then can do what no president can, raise their own appropriations by a direct tax on the consuming public.

As has happened before, the President has been put on the spot by John L. Lewis.

The time is near for Congress to do what the President has failed to do—lay down a national labor policy with teeth in it.

The public as a whole, and the national government, cannot afford to play second fiddle to labor bosses.

BUCKS CO. HUNTERS WANT PHEASANTS OF HEAVIER TYPE

Ask State Game Commission To Raise Mongolian
Pheasants

TYPE NOW TOO LIGHT

Trout Streams Are Reported To Be in Very Good Condition

DOYLESTOWN, Mar. 6.—Bucks county hunters want the Pennsylvania Game Commission to raise pheasants with more meat on them.

This desire was made known last evening when delegates from 12 sportsmen's groups adopted a resolution which put the Bucks County Federation of Sportsmen's Clubs on record to that effect.

The heavier type pheasant, known as the Mongolian pheasant, was raised some years ago by the Game Commission and then stopped when sportsmen declared this type bird was too slow in flight. The Commission then began to raise the Chinese pheasant. This is the bird that is being raised and stocked at the present time.

At the meeting, held at the Monument Restaurant last evening, Bucks county sportsmen reversed their stand on the question, claiming the present bird does not reproduce as readily as the bird formerly raised. They also felt the Chinese pheasant is ruining many good bird dogs because of the fact this bird will run for great distances, thus making it impossible for a bird dog to stand him.

State Fish Warden Harry Cole told delegates that trout streams are in very good condition at present and that the forepart of the season should be very good. He said the Fish Commission is planning to stock some very fine trout in Bucks County trout streams. Federation Fish committee chairman, Leon Wells, Langhorne, told members that sucker fishing was excellent at the present time. He said numerous large catches have been made in the Neshaminy Creek and along the Delaware above Trenton.

Delegates from the following 12 clubs were on hand: Branch Valley, Bristol, Bucks Co., Delaware Valley, Edgely, Great Swamp, Langhorne, Middletown, Morrisville, New Hope, Newtown and Penn Manor.

whether or not they are free from the social diseases. The speaker also showed a number of pictures to illustrate his remarks.

Prior to the talk a brief business session was conducted by the overseer, Harold Yoder, in the absence of the master, Joseph Lord. Report was made by the oyster supper committee that plans have been completed for the supper.

Several applications for membership were received, and an announcement was made the candidates will receive the first and second degrees at a meeting at the headquarters of Tyro Hall Grange, Buckingham, on March 14th. Third and fourth degrees will be conferred at a special meeting on Wednesday evening, April 4th.

The next meeting of the Plumsteadville Grange will be held on March 16th, at which time motion pictures will be shown by a representative of the Bell Telephone Co.

"Then one day I found myself in a plane bound for North Africa. This was the invasion we had long been preparing for—and now tens of thousands of Americans, like myself, found themselves in a foreign country where the people spoke a strange tongue. After the excitement of the fighting died down, we were at a loss to know what to do when we left camp. Once more the Red Cross came to our aid. It was during my long stay in Algiers, Algeria, that I really began to appreciate the tremendous job these people were doing. Because aside from looking after our personal welfare they also had the job of feeding and clothing large portions of a population that had been stripped clean by the Germans. Food, clothing, medical supplies and even hospitalization were furnished by the Red Cross to French and Arabs alike. This I believe proved to these people

It would take too long to cover everything I had seen during my 15 months of overseas service. And on the cold wet morning that I left the foreign shores to embark for the U.
